MIDDLETOWN — A city man has been slapped with drug charges after local police found $80 worth of crack cocaine in his "buttocks area."

Jahema Turner, 28, of ██████████, was stopped by police on Grand Street on March 26. He had been the subject of a recent narcotics investigation and officers came at him armed with a warrant to search him and his home.

After being informed of the warrant, Turner reportedly told police he was not carrying any drugs. As officers attempted to Police continued to search the suspect's buttocks and reportedly pulled out a clear plastic baggie containing a rock-like substance, which later tested positive for crack cocaine, police said. Upon making the discovery, the suspect reportedly said, "You got me."

because he was suffering from hemorrhoids, according to the arrest report.

Police continued the search and reportedly pulled out a clear plastic baggie containing a rock-like substance, which later tested positive for crack cocaine, police said.

Upon making the find, Turner produced an electronic scale that police say is used for weighing narcotics and a metal razor with a white powdery substance on the edge, commonly used for cutting crack cocaine into smaller amounts.

Turner allegedly admitted to police that he was a small-time prison in December. He reportedly told police he primarily serves as a middleman and sets up meetings between dealers and buyers. Turner told police he only sells small amounts of crack because he is trying to turn his life around, according to the arrest report.

He was charged with possession of crack cocaine, possession of crack cocaine with intent to sell, possession of drugs within 1,500 feet of a school zone and possession of drug paraphernalia.

He was set free after posting a $10,000 non-surety bond and is set to appear in court Friday.
